real sewage has been investigated in the presence of Shewanella loihica, a microorganism that is able to degrade some compounds of environmental concern, and in the presence of an external electron acceptor, nitrate. Bisphenol A (BPA) has been selected as target compound, and the results have been compared with those obtained when sludge from anaerobic treatment process was inoculated (anoxic). BPA degradation and biomass formation were monitored during more than 150 days of operation, and the results indicated that BPA did not lead to problems of growth inhibition or sludge toxicity. This BPA removal rate was always higher than 90%. The presence of Shewanella loihica increased BPA removal and biodegradation rates during all the experimental period, demonstrating that Shewanella loihica can contribute to the detoxification of xenobiotics in activated sludge systems. The significance of Shewanella loihica as a suitable inoculum for wastewater treatment systems is discussed. Numerous studies have shown the effectiveness of female-to-male (FtM) transsexuals who have received cross-sex hormones as an alternative to psychotherapy for treatment of gender dysphoria. However, the long-term effectiveness of this treatment remains an important question in contemporary endocrinology. We thus conducted a retrospective, matched-cohort study using data

Really like this! -- A bipartisan bill introduced in the House of Representatives would end the requirement that low-income students in the United States gain admission to college or university of their choice. The "Access to Higher Education for All Americans Act," would provide federal grants to students to attend community college, and or take online courses, whichever is most beneficial. "Under the current student financial aid system, the financial aid package offered to students is determined by factors that are out of the students' control, such as the school to which they are admitted," Rep. John Kline, R-Minnesota, who introduced the bill, said in a statement. "This bill will close that loophole and provide students with more options on their path to higher education and a brighter future." "Public school districts must be allowed to pick the students they want to educate rather than having an outdated federal program pick for them. This bill makes a small but significant change to federal law to allow students to have more choice in where they spend their money on college." This legislation is similar to a 2012 initiative introduced in the Senate by Sen. Jeff Merkley, D-Oregon. However, Merkley's bill contained a number of extra provisions, including offering students course credits for military service. That provision was removed in Kline's bill. On the House floor, Kline said the bill does not deal with federal loans or the eligibility requirements that may limit access to federal loans for low-income students. "What this bill will do is give the states the tools to provide students with more affordable options," Kline said. "It is a modest step forward in providing greater access to higher education for low-income students." Rep. Rosa L. DeLauro, D-Connecticut, who supported the bill, said students in the lowest income brackets cannot afford the tuition to attend college-level education. "I'm pleased to be here today introducing the Access to Higher Education for All Americans Act -- this legislation will provide students with the opportunity to access the educational services necessary for success in their lives," DeLauro said. DeLauro said the bill does not limit eligibility for federal grants to low-income students. "By helping 3e33713323
