Unfortunately, this beautiful example of Baroque is not restored at all, because in 1882 the Brazilians categorically did not want to give their church to the Catholics. But last year it was decided to restore it, because the building may well be suitable for other purposes. This picture was also taken in 1884 during the restoration. The Catholic church of St. Joan remained in its place, but its bell tower was demolished, and the facade was converted into a Baroque church. Cathedral of Saint Martin Interestingly, this cathedral was built in 1641 - that is, earlier than the temple of the Virgin and Saints Christopher and Columba in the same place, which were also built in the 16th century. No bell tower. This photo is not entirely successful: it can be seen that the front of the facade looks very harmonious, but the back does not. It clearly shows the fact that the first facade in 1631 was rebuilt from another baroque temple: Belfry with the so-called breccia (brickwork pattern): This picture clearly shows the difference in masonry that arose between the old and new facades: Again, I canâ€™t help but compare, so as not to add that these pictures also show the innovations that appeared here at the end of the 18th century, after palaces for the nobility began to be created in Rio de Janeiro. This is a glazed gallery, which can be seen in the picture above. Already in 1635, the construction of the Dominican temple for the soldiers and officers of the Portuguese army began in Rio. Basically, the temple was built between 1645 and 1653, since it was at this time that the last wars of King Sebastian with the Habsburg Empire fell, ending with his defeat at the Battle of Aranjuez in 1716. At the end of the 17th century in Rio, it was replaced by a new cathedral, which still stands today. Access to the temple is open. The temple is small and modest, but it can be considered an architectural monument of that time.
